We thank Dr Arzu Yagis On for pointing out an inadvertent error in quoting from his study in the discussion part of our case report. The confusion was due to a Cochrane Review on Postpolio syndrome that reviewed nine pharmacological and three non-pharmacological treatments for PPS. We reviewed the article by Elisabeth Farbu quoted by Dr On in the above letter and found that she also cited the study by On et al as an open study. This review article also concluded that the primary treatment of PPS is based on non-pharmacological interventions and lifestyle modifications.

We would like to correct the statement to read 'A single blinded randomized study found lamotrigine to be effective in relieving pain, fatigue and quality of life, but double blind randomized controlled studies are needed to establish efficacy'.
